29 November 1973

Dear Edith:

On behalf of Roger, who is currently immersed in the two-day conference in S.F. on communications law, I'm writing to say how much he appreciates your thoughtfulness in sending on the IPI Report of September/October 1973. It couldn't be more timely.

To complete the circle, I am enclosing a copy of the J.R. Wiggins piece in The Bulletin of ASNE, October 1973, which the executive editor of the Wall Street Journal was kind enough to send on to me by way of bearing one more point of view to our perpetually reading menage. Would you return it at your convenience, it is my only copy.

It was encouraging that Roger's address to the New England Society of Newspaper Editors was so well received. He is now fineing it further for an address before a legal group in January; if eventually it winds up in formal publication, we'll see that a copy gets to you.

That impending assignment, circa 11 January and in the East, is one I should have taken account of when talking with you yesterday. Roger works with such intensity at whatever he undertakes that I have long since given up trying to win him away from the workbench when he is in the midst of an intricate job. It looks as if it will be later in January rather than early before the first clearing. We wish that relentless calendar would let us have more than nine lives so that we could see more of friends.

All our good wishes to you and Norman and your dear family.

As ever,
