Dear Justice Traynor:

You may recall our correspondence of several months ago in connection with the work of the National News Council. I sent you several items that grew out of my work with local councils.

I'm writing to ask whether it will be possible for you to extend your visit to Stanford on October 23 for a few hours. I have a class that meets at 4:15 on Tuesdays. It's a highly informal class that meets for no other purpose than to hear journalists (reporters, broadcasters, editors, columnists, and the like) talk briefly about their work and respond to questions. The class has become so popular that 150-200 students are enrolled every quarter.

It seems to me that the National News Council is so important that I'd like to lure you if I can. The students certainly agree.

All the best,

Bill Rivers
