

9-16-1973

Why Shoudn't the Electronic Press Have the Same First Ammendment Rights as the Print Press?

Roger J. Traynor

The National News Council, Inc.

Follow this and additional works at: <http://repository.uchastings.edu/nnc>

Recommended Citation

Roger J. Traynor, Why Shoudn't the Electronic Press Have the Same First Ammendment Rights as the Print Press? (1973).

Available at: <http://repository.uchastings.edu/nnc/157>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Judicial Ethics and the National News Council at UC Hastings Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Formation of the National News Council by an authorized administrator of UC Hastings Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact marcusc@uchastings.edu.

78

Why shouldn't the electronic press have the same First Amendment rights as the printed press. print press

Connor NY Times Sept 16, 1993:

With an increasing ~~any~~ majority of people relying on television as their "primary" source of news, is a network news program, beamed over airwaves that at least technically belong to the people, equivalent to a newspaper, even a major newspaper? How much unlimited power should be placed in these centralized conduits? If the networks do distort, however unintentionally, who will force them to clarify?

Quoting Hughes WPIV

The broadcaster, more than any other single part of the communications complex, must think of himself as a conduit for increasing the understanding of controversial issues. As a result, he must, at the very least, make sure that all sides of controversial issues are presented if any side is presented.